

COMMUNICATION THROUGH CREATION

God communicates to the artist through life itself. He speaks to the artist and all in and through all things. The necessity within humans selves to create things of meaning is a remnant of what drove God to create us. We are made in His likeness. He brings things into existence- man influences and conducts them for convenience and practicality. As we do this, in a sense, we ourselves create with what has already been created.

To open lines of communication between ourselves, God, and what we compose is the mission. This type of fluidity is what helps to develop and shape an artist life and work as well...

As we contribute to create our surroundings among other factions of culture, we are planting seeds in fertile ground for the inspiration of future works. The submission to contemplation of the abstract forces in art and life in general can be a significant inauguration . The longing to procreate is the nucleolus of our actuality that is its chosen language.

God communicates with some artists out of the familiar stirrings in the spirit-passionate creativity-and it is often their familiarity with this that is everyone else's darkness. He creates, bringing things into existence for artists to take casts of. Artists can never overestimate that fact and it's preciousness.
